“ Transfer credits into a 4 year university for a fraction of the price. ”

Ming Yuan Low: I am an Assistant Professor of Music Therapy of Berkley, College of Music. I am a proud graduate of Navarro College, ugh, Class of 2006.

I got my associate's in music from Navarro. I since got my master's in music therapy at Texas Women's University, and a PhD in Creative Arts Therapies at Drexel.

I was so lucky that when I was going to Navarro, that, um, Sheila Harris was very open to it. She was, uh, my music theory teacher and also mentored me a lot in piano playing. I played piano for all the bands, and, uh, sometimes I helped out with rehearsals at choir, so she helped me a lot. And, um, she was the one who said, "Yeah, Music Therapy is a great major. You should go down to TWU. It's one of the top schools of music therapy in the nation." I was like, yeah, let's go there.

Very good question. Yes, I would definitely recommend Navarro College to other students if they're looking for a great place to build community, to learn from each other, from uh, from great teachers, if they want to transfer credits, um, into a four-year college or university for a fraction of the price, with of small classes, individualize of teaching, and a great school community, yes, definitely go to Navarro.
